From the Director...

Edgar Allan Poe has long been considered the most recognized writer of gothic horror and the bizarre—a forerunner of Stephen King. His writings lend themselves to readers presentational theatre. Tonight you will see a combination of readers theatre with a little fencing and stabbing thrown in for good measure. It is a blend of Poe's poetry, short stories, mysteries, and horror tales. The cast has worked hard to bring you this show to you, the audience. They have done an outstanding job with very difficult material. I am very proud of them, each cast member has been a pleasure to work with on this production.

Sandra Dickson

Special Thanks

Thank you to Scott Dickson for his instruction in stage combat.

What's next at the Dosta Playhouse?

A Tuna Christmas-Dec. 4-7, 11-13. It's Christmas time in Tuna, the third smallest town in Texas, and Santa is bringing laughs for everyone!

Auditions for Kill Me, Deadly-Dec. 8, 9. A large cast is needed for this film noir spoof.
